Louisville Technical Institute Becomes Division of Spencianer

Louisville Technical Institute, a vocational, technical college training all areas of technical engineers and design draftsmen, has become a division of Spencianer College. The technical school broadens the curriculum of Spencianer greatly and will most certainly bring more men to the college.

Louisville Technical Institute was begun twelve years ago by a small group of engineers who saw the need for a design drafting and engineering technology school. Being engineers themselves, their philosophy of education was to be practical and teach only those things necessary for success in engineering. They began and continue today by having a faculty of experienced, practicing engineers. Mr. George Dumbaugh, one of the founders of the school who remains on the faculty, states, "In engineering technology we have to be relevant, we cannot exist on theory." Every class at Tech is relevant to a particular engineering task and even the math is applied to a job, not just taught to learn problem solving.

College To Form Weight Watchers Club

By Weight Watchers of Kentucky, Inc., and Spencianer College are working together to sponsor a Weight Watchers group during the lunch hours at the college.

In the belief that several students at Spencianer need to begin weight control or suffer the effects of job discrimination, Spencianer Director Dr. E. H. Weber contacted Weight Watchers to begin the classes. He said, "We don't have a large number of overweight students, but there are those who could profit by becoming Weight Watchers."

Formal classes will begin during fourth and fifth period in September. The first session will be an open house for anyone interested in losing weight or learning about Weight Watchers.

Dorm To Bring Campus Life

Each dormitory room houses two girls and all Spencerian girls will be on one floor with a U of L advisor. The U of L advisor is an upper class student at the University and she serves as a dormitory counselor and advisor to students on her floor.

Each room in the beautiful new dorm has a private telephone, study desks, closet space and of course two beds. One of the modern features of each room is an individually controlled thermostat to control heat and air conditioning in the room.

Food or Men?

Students feel that one of the greatest assets of the new dormitory arrangement is access to the University Campus cafeteria and snack bar. Could it be men they are thinking of rather than food?

If none of this appeals to you, maybe you're more the "nature" type. The dorm is situated so that you have a beautiful view of the city. Can you imagine what a relief it would be to look out a window and see the lights of Louisville instead of a brick wall? It's not quite so depressing anyway. It might do something for you to know that you can even see Spencerian from rooms on the north side.

There is also the roof-top sundeck where students can get those beautiful tans they've been wanting, but couldn't get because of school. No more embarrassment over being a paleface.

Beginning in late July, tours will be arranged for students to see the new dorm. Students interested in living in the U of L dorm should contact Mr. Joe Thurman or Mr. Tom Rector for details and an application. Space is limited. Do not delay.
