Litter Named Instructor of the Year

When the name Laura Litter is mentioned around womens' college basketball coaches, the phrase “one of the best coaches in the nation” is often used to describe her. While it is true that her team’s won-loss record places her among the top ten coaches and her Sullivan Executives are always ranked in the nation’s top twenty, her talents as a classroom instructor are equally important to Sullivan College.

Litter was recently named Instructor of the Year for 1993 because of her classroom teaching skills. “Dedicated, conscientious, respected by peers and students,” were all words used by Director of Education Gary Fellows to describe Litter and her contributions to her students, the faculty and Sullivan College.

Students Evaluate Faculty

Since joining the faculty five years ago, Litter has always received top student evaluations. Students are given the opportunity twice a year to evaluate each of their instructors. The confidential student evaluations are part of the continuous review of the effectiveness of the faculty in the classroom.

At Sullivan, Instructor of the Year Litter teaches basic math, a course included in most programs. She holds both a bachelors and masters degree from Morehead State University.
