We’re glad we chose Sullivan

“I chose Sullivan because it is regionally-accredited. Also it is affordable and part of a school system that is different from other area colleges and universities. I want to be a Medical Administrative Assistant because I didn’t want my lack of medical aptitude to stop me from helping in the medical field.”

DERRICK ADAMS
Medical Office Management

“I have extensive experience with real estate sales, mortgage, finance, sales, and property management. I want to further my education and I want to reinforce and improve my sales, mortgage, finance managing and sales skills. I have extensive experience with real estate sales. I didn’t want my lack of medicinal aptitude to stop me from helping in the medical field.”

WILLIAM T. BIDDLE, II
Marketing & Sales Management

“I chose Sullivan because of the Paralegal program; their accreditation, and ABA approval. The small class size allows for more open discussion and also for more one-on-one interactions with other students. My experience has been better than I expected. The professors are wonderful and truly care about the success of their students.”

CANDY HANLEY, Medical Office Management

Sullivan campus gives gift of life

Sullivan University welcomes the Central Kentucky Blood Center (CKBC) BloodMobile each quarter. Students, faculty, and staff are excited to help others in the Central Kentucky area. Many times, the CKBC has fun promotions that the students really enjoy. Right, Academic Dean David Tudor is a dedicated blood donor.

Horsing around for a good cause

An outreach community project had sweet participation by Culinary Arts student, Susie Veech, pictured above, who prepared delicious cakes for the kick-off of the Kidney Health Alliance of Kentucky’s ‘A World of Horses’ event. Young children, associated with this project, decorated miniature horse fences for this event, and the themed cakes brought lots of smiles too. This philanthropic community event supports the efforts, education and awareness for kidney health.

Sullivan students will shine again

The second annual Kentucky Proud Incredible Food Show returns to Lexington on October 23 and 24. This exciting show will be held at the Kentucky Convention Center & Rupp Arena venue. Sullivan University’s National Center for Hospitality (NCHS) program is an active partner and supporter of this event, offering students, chefs, faculty and staff a major role in an outstanding community event. "This is a wonderful opportunity for NCHS students,” stated Kelli Oakley, Associate Director of Admissions. “This event provides students with an excellent forum for demonstrating skills and knowledge in front of an interested audience eager to gain practical information. Sullivan’s students can participate in this event from the large venue of offerings Sullivan has been given the opportunity to provide for this event.” Watch the next Herald for highlights of Sullivan University’s involvement in this fabulous event.

Sullivan to the rescue with help for Haiti

Student Anna Kozlowski was determined that she was going to help the citizens of Haiti recover from the devastation of the earthquake. She organized efforts with the Student Life Department at Sullivan University to coordinate a food and supply drive. Anna has had a long-standing relationship with an orphanage in Haiti, and was extremely concerned about effects of the disaster on the already taxed infrastructure and citizens. Students, faculty and staff responded to the call and met the need by donating a great deal of supplies to be delivered to the ravaged region.

Successful Sheep and Fiber Festival to be annual event

The first annual Kentucky Sheep and Fiber Festival was a huge success, drawing more than 2,500 visitors and observers wanting to learn more about this growing industry in Kentucky. The Festival invited Sullivan University’s Culinary Department to add to the exhibits by sponsoring an on-site cooking competition. Four teams of three students grilled and prepared dishes using lamb to promote the festival products. Entries were judged by Chef Jim Whaley, lamb producer Nancy Malcar, and Chef Chris Mason ’01, three well-respected industry professionals. Congratulations to winning team members Susie Veech, Cindy Hall and Eman Normanc who received prizes donated by the Kentucky Sheep and Fiber state organization.

Along with product demonstrations there were sixty-three vendors, workshops and a variety of write-in open house at the venue for all to all see. Plans are already in process for the 2011 event.

Sullivan campus gives gift of life

Sullivan University welcomes the Central Kentucky Blood Center (CKBC) BloodMobile each quarter. Students, faculty, and staff are excited to help others in the Central Kentucky area. Many times, the CKBC has fun promotions that the students really enjoy. Right, Academic Dean David Tudor is a dedicated blood donor.

Horsing around for a good cause

An outreach community project had sweet participation by Culinary Arts student, Susie Veech, pictured above, who prepared delicious cakes for the kick-off of the Kidney Health Alliance of Kentucky’s ‘A World of Horses’ event. Young children, associated with this project, decorated miniature horse fences for this event, and the themed cakes brought lots of smiles too. This philanthropic community event supports the efforts, education and awareness for kidney health.

Sullivan students will shine again

The second annual Kentucky Proud Incredible Food Show returns to Lexington on October 23 and 24. This exciting show will be held at the Kentucky Convention Center & Rupp Arena venue. Sullivan University’s National Center for Hospitality (NCHS) program is an active partner and supporter of this event, offering students, chefs, faculty and staff a major role in an outstanding community event. “This is a wonderful opportunity for NCHS students,” stated Kelli Oakley, Associate Director of Admissions. “This event provides students with an excellent forum for demonstrating skills and knowledge in front of an interested audience eager to gain practical information. Sullivan’s students can participate in this event from the large venue of offerings Sullivan has been given the opportunity to provide for this event.” Watch the next Herald for highlights of Sullivan University’s involvement in this fabulous event.

Sullivan to the rescue with help for Haiti

Student Anna Kozlowski was determined that she was going to help the citizens of Haiti recover from the devastation of the earthquake. She organized efforts with the Student Life Department at Sullivan University to coordinate a food and supply drive. Anna has had a long-standing relationship with an orphanage in Haiti, and was extremely concerned about effects of the disaster on the already taxed infrastructure and citizens. Students, faculty and staff responded to the call and met the need by donating a great deal of supplies to be delivered to the ravaged region.

Successful Sheep and Fiber Festival to be annual event

The first annual Kentucky Sheep and Fiber Festival was a huge success, drawing more than 2,500 visitors and observers wanting to learn more about this growing industry in Kentucky. The Festival invited Sullivan University’s Culinary Department to add to the exhibits by sponsoring an on-site cooking competition. Four teams of three students grilled and prepared dishes using lamb to promote the festival products. Entries were judged by Chef Jim Whaley, lamb producer Nancy Malcar, and Chef Chris Mason ’01, three well-respected industry professionals. Congratulations to winning team members Susie Veech, Cindy Hall and Eman Normanc who received prizes donated by the Kentucky Sheep and Fiber state organization.

Along with product demonstrations there were sixty-three vendors, workshops and a variety of write-in open house at the venue for all to all see. Plans are already in process for the 2011 event.

Sullivan campus gives gift of life

Sullivan University welcomes the Central Kentucky Blood Center (CKBC) BloodMobile each quarter. Students, faculty, and staff are excited to help others in the Central Kentucky area. Many times, the CKBC has fun promotions that the students really enjoy. Right, Academic Dean David Tudor is a dedicated blood donor.

Horsing around for a good cause

An outreach community project had sweet participation by Culinary Arts student, Susie Veech, pictured above, who prepared delicious cakes for the kick-off of the Kidney Health Alliance of Kentucky’s ‘A World of Horses’ event. Young children, associated with this project, decorated miniature horse fences for this event, and the themed cakes brought lots of smiles too. This philanthropic community event supports the efforts, education and awareness for kidney health.

Sullivan students will shine again

The second annual Kentucky Proud Incredible Food Show returns to Lexington on October 23 and 24. This exciting show will be held at the Kentucky Convention Center & Rupp Arena venue. Sullivan University’s National Center for Hospitality (NCHS) program is an active partner and supporter of this event, offering students, chefs, faculty and staff a major role in an outstanding community event. “This is a wonderful opportunity for NCHS students,” stated Kelli Oakley, Associate Director of Admissions. “This event provides students with an excellent forum for demonstrating skills and knowledge in front of an interested audience eager to gain practical information. Sullivan’s students can participate in this event from the large venue of offerings Sullivan has been given the opportunity to provide for this event.” Watch the next Herald for highlights of Sullivan University’s involvement in this fabulous event.

Sullivan to the rescue with help for Haiti

Student Anna Kozlowski was determined that she was going to help the citizens of Haiti recover from the devastation of the earthquake. She organized efforts with the Student Life Department at Sullivan University to coordinate a food and supply drive. Anna has had a long-standing relationship with an orphanage in Haiti, and was extremely concerned about effects of the disaster on the already taxed infrastructure and citizens. Students, faculty and staff responded to the call and met the need by donating a great deal of supplies to be delivered to the ravaged region.

Successful Sheep and Fiber Festival to be annual event

The first annual Kentucky Sheep and Fiber Festival was a huge success, drawing more than 2,500 visitors and observers wanting to learn more about this growing industry in Kentucky. The Festival invited Sullivan University’s Culinary Department to add to the exhibits by sponsoring an on-site cooking competition. Four teams of three students grilled and prepared dishes using lamb to promote the festival products. Entries were judged by Chef Jim Whaley, lamb producer Nancy Malcar, and Chef Chris Mason ’01, three well-respected industry professionals. Congratulations to winning team members Susie Veech, Cindy Hall and Eman Normanc who received prizes donated by the Kentucky Sheep and Fiber state organization.

Along with product demonstrations there were sixty-three vendors, workshops and a variety of write-in open house at the venue for all to all see. Plans are already in process for the 2011 event.